Williams Creek Management was given the opportunity to provide natural resource construction services to restore stream and pond, construct water features, install meandering paths through property, install native prairies and as well as native landscaping. This property now provides a self-sustaining private sanctuary to relax and enjoy wildlife habitat.

Williams Creek Management began work on this property in the spring of 2005. The client wanted to restore the property natural habitat, while keeping the area relatively maintenance free.

Williams Creek Management has restored many natural water features on this site, beginning with stream and pond. Both the stream and pond had shear failing banks that were pulled back and enhanced with native seed and plant material. Williams Creek Management has also created many water features on this site. Creating waterfalls, spillways, and high flow relief channels are just a few of the additional features.
